The Kanchenjunga Circuit trek is an extraordinary 21-day adventure that circles Mt. Kanchenjunga (8,586 meters), the world's third-highest peak. Along the Nepal-India border in the eastern Himalayas, this comprehensive trek offers a complete circuit of Mount Kanchenjunga. It combines both the northern and southern base camp routes, passing through Nepal's remote Taplejung districts.

The name "Kanchenjunga" comes from Tibetan, meaning "Five Treasures of the Great Snow"- referring to the mountain's five peaks. Until 1852, Kanchenjunga was believed to be the world's highest peak. The region remained isolated mainly until Nepal opened its borders to trekkers in 1988. The mountain holds deep spiritual significance for the local Limbu, Rai, and Sherpa communities, who consider it sacred.

The Kanchenjunga Conservation Area (KCA), established in 1997, showcases the region's incredible biodiversity. The trek route traverses multiple ecological zones, from subtropical forests to alpine meadows. Wildlife enthusiasts might glimpse rare species such as snow leopards, red pandas, Himalayan black bears, and musk deer.

The Kanchenjunga Circuit trekking begins with a Kathmandu to Bhadrapur flight followed by a scenic drive to Taplejung, the gateway to the Kanchenjunga region. From there, another road journey takes you to Sekathum, the starting point of the trek. The trail winds through lush forests and traditional settlements, gradually climbing through Amjilosa and Gyable before reaching Ghunsa.

As the trek progresses higher, the landscape changes dramatically. Ghunsa is the last permanent village on the Kanchenjunga north base camp trek route and an important place to rest and acclimatize. Here, you can visit the ancient Tashi Choeling Gompa. The trail then continues through the high settlements of Khambachen and Lhonak.

The trek reaches its first major highlight at the Kanchenjunga North Base Camp at Pangpema (5,143 meters). Here, you'll admire the view of Kanchenjunga's north face, along with Chang Himal, Jannu Peak, and numerous Tibet Himalayan ranges. After soaking in these appealing vistas, retrace your steps through Lhonak back to Ghunsa.

From Ghunsa, the path leads to one of the trek's most challenging sections- crossing the Sele La Pass at 4,290 meters. This pass is a crucial junction connecting the northern and southern base camp routes. After crossing Sele La, the trail descends to Tseram. Walking alongside the Yalung Glacier, you'll reach Ramche while passing through diverse ecosystems, from rhododendrons and pine forests to glacial moraines and high-altitude grasslands. Keep your eyes open for blue sheep grazing on the mountainsides.

The southern portion of the trek culminates at Oktang Base Camp, also known as Kanchenjunga South Base Camp (4,730 meters). This vantage point offers enthralling views of Kanchenjunga's three main peaks, each towering above 8,400 meters. The descent leads through Tseram and Tortong, where the landscape gradually transforms back to lower elevations with moss-covered trees and vibrant forests.

The Kanchenjunga trekking concludes in Yamphudin, also known as Sherpagaon. From here, you'll transition to a scenic drive to Illam, Nepal's famous tea-growing region. Finally, the Kanchenjunga circuit adventure ends with a return to Bhadrapur for your flight back to Kathmandu.
